Materials Are Available For AAA Farmers

Conservation materials for use under the 1941 AAA farm program year which began in Virginia September 1, are now available to farmers participating in the program, Producers may order these materials now at the county AAA office for use this fall in carrying soil building practices, says S. K. Cassell, state executive officer.

Materials now available include limestone and superphosphate, which are available in all counties. The materials are supplied to farmers for use in carrying out approved AAA soil-building practices. The cost of the materials is deducted from conservation payments farmers may earn by participating in the program.

Farmers may using conservation materials this fall in such practices as applying superphosphate to pastures and to meadowdrags of legumes and grasses, and liming land on which small grains and grass and clover will be seeded to protect the land against erosion and leaching. The proper use of conservation materials under the program are discussed with each farmer at the time he places his request for them.

The furnishing of conservation materials through the AAA farm program has enabled many farmers to greatly expand the employment of soil-building practices on land especially in need of improvement.

State extension agronomists have emphasized the value to farmers of having limestone and phosphate in their soil-building programs. In spite of the progress made in recent years, Virginia farmers annually use only about one-third the tonnage of lime actually required to maintain our soils at a chemical state to produce most efficiently and economically.

Lion Is Favorite Emblem Of Royalty in Europe

Among the emblems of royalty in the old world the lion is the favorite beast, according to Harold Lamb, authority on Asia and author of "The March of the Barbarians." The unicorn is rare, but one of the great favorites is the eagle, use of which is by no means confined to the United States. The eagle flourished on the Roman standards, and has its Scandinavian traditions—which may have bestowed it on the German imperium in medieval times.

The crowned eagle of Poland is even older. As to the two-headed eagle of the Russian czars, Harold Lamb learned last summer in Kiev that it does not, as supposed, derive from Poland. It was adapted from Byzantium at the time the early czars were proclaimed to be the successors in the line of Byzantine emperors. It did not, however, originate in Constantinople, but came from Asia in a still earlier age—from Persia, where it had been a heraldic device in the dawn of historical time.

In Persia Mr. Lamb was hospitably entertained by government officials and before departing he intimated that he would like to leave some small gift to be presented to the shah. It was suggested that copies of his two books, "Genghis Khan" and "Timerlane," might be the most suitable gift for H. M. Reza Pahlavi Shah. The author pointed out that ordinary books would hardly do—they should be bound especially for H. M. by the publisher, Doubleday, Doran. The binding should undoubtedly have the imperial Chrisine of Persia upon it. "Yes, certainly," the author's hosts agreed, "but that would mean the insignia of the lion."

"And why not a lion?" Mr. Lamb asked.

Something seemed to trouble the Persians. "Then it must be a Persian lion," they learned, "and not British."

Apparently the publisher was equal to the task of ornamenting the presentation copies with lions distinctively Persian, because next year the author learned that H. M. had received the books with pleasure and had examined them himself.

Use Care When Buying Bathing Suit for Summer

Don't buy a bathing suit without a fitting! Here's one garment in your summer wardrobe that needs to be selected with the greatest possible care . . . all because it dramatizes the best features of your figure and makes something of a comic valentine of your less attractive ones.

Gone are the days when bathing suit shoppers dashed up to the bathing suit counter and hurriedly demanded, "I want a white . . . size 38."

Smart shoppers now consider:

Bra-and-short suits expose a bare midriff, so are for the lean-waisted only.

Dressmaker types, with full-flared skirts are excellent for larger figures.

All-day swimmers find a rubber bathing suit practical because it can be wiped dry in a few minutes.

White wool needs spotless surroundings.

Backless suits need good straight backs . . . pointed shoulder blades beware.

Inside uplift bras are a must for the full-busted figure.

Now go ahead . . . pick out yours.

Marten Stages Come-Back

Once almost extinct in this section of the Rockies, the elusive marten, a pride of the early day trappers, is staging a strong come-back in the park, Naturalist Raymond Gregg has reported.

Under the protection of the national park service, the fur bearing animal has multiplied its numbers many times since the establishment of Rocky Mountain National park in 1915, eliminating activities of trappers in the area.

While usually making forays on smaller animals at elevations from 8,000 to 10,000 feet, marten have been observed on the summit of Longs peak, 14,255 feet high, in search of coneys, small rodent-like mammals making their homes in talus slopes above timberline.

Wolves Scarce

Predatory animals appear to be scarcer than usual in the Goodpaster country and game seems to be normal in the quantities, according to J. W. Thompson, veteran trapper of Alaska.

"I brought only one predator hide for a bounty," he declared. "Tis pelt is that of a coyote. I didn't see tracks of many wolves or coyotes in the past winter.

"The big game in the Goodpaster district consists of moose, bear and caribou. The occurrence of these animals at present is normal.

"On my way I saw a band of 40 caribou. They stood the winter well.

"Mining will be active this season on the upper reaches of the Goodpaster."

25,000,000 Homes Needed

Decent housing for all the poor would require a 50-year building program calling for erection of 18,000,000 homes, the housing committee of the American Institute of Architects reported to its annual convention in Washington.

Oldest Living Trees Are Found in Texas Region

The oldest living trees on the American continent, and perhaps in the world, are the cedars which are found in remote parts of the Trans-Pecos region of Texas, according to H. L. George, civil engineer and forester. These trees grow in semi-arid soil that is almost pure gypsum and are several thousand years older than the giant redwoods in California, Mr. George said.

"Some time ago I was retracing some of the surveying work done by Jacob Keuchler, an early surveyor who located lands west of the Pecos river, about 40 miles north of Kent, Texas," he said. "This work was done in 1879. He marked trees with a cross. These cedars have not grown sufficiently in 59 years to cover these marks. Several of the trees were on our survey line and had to be cut, and at that time we noticed that their rings were so close together that they could not be seen without the aid of a powerful magnifying glass.

"By examining several of the trees closely, we found there were approximately 70 rings to the quarter inch. At this rate of growth, one inch would cover a span of 280 years, and since some of these trees are 36 inches in diameter, they would be approximately 10,000 years old.

"The trees seem almost indestructible, and when they are cut down, the wood is so dry and hard that even a live tree has the appearance of a dead one." Mr. George added. Stakes cut from the trees and driven into the ground in 1879 are still in a perfect state of preservation, he said.

MAKE One Stop FOR FARM SUPPLIES

Southern States patrons are fast building a complete one-stop service for feed, seed, fertilizer and other farm supplies. The same care and preparation taken in making open formula feeds and fertilizer is now applied to the purchase and quality-control of a wide variety of farm supplies from rubber tires to steel roofing.

Check your fall needs with your nearest Southern States Cooperative Service Agency. What he does not carry in stock he can order for you through a fast-moving distribution service which brings you better supplies at lower costs.

HERE ARE A FEW SUGGESTIONS

UNICO SOYA PAINT has higher gloss, brighter color with greater tinting strength. This premium paint is cooperatively made under the supervision of men who work for farmers and know farm paint needs. This is a farm paint made from a farm product.

UNICO TIRES stand the gaff of thousands of miles of service between the farm and city markets. They can take punishing duty in every piece of farm work or on the highway. Made in all standard sizes, they are priced lower than many comparable brands.

UNICO MOTOR OIL is a 100 per cent paraffin base oil, long-wearing, makes real savings.

UNICO STEEL ROOFING. Under average farm conditions this heavy zinc-coated roofing will give years of service without rust and without expense for upkeep and replacement. It's fireproof, vermin-proof, storm-proof, and easy to apply.

What UNICO Means

Unico stands for United Cooperatives, an organization of six important farmers' cooperatives pooling the purchasing power of hundreds of thousands of farmers to bring better farm supplies to the farm with greater dollar value.

Entire Farm Family Benefits From Electric Water System

By IRA MILLER
Farm Electrification Bureau

HOW many tons of water did you and your family pump and carry last year to satisfy your needs and those of your stock and garden? A minimum of 20 to 30 tons if you did not have an automatic pressure water system; probably more if you did.

With running water in the house, she saves hours of hard work.

Few farmers realize how much time and labor the "hired hands," usually his wife and children, spend in hand pumping water for the kitchen alone—30 eight-hour days and 200,000 steps each year being the average. But, doing it themselves, they should be conscious of the work and discomfort—particularly in bad weather—involved in pumping or hauling water for the livestock and other about-the-farm uses.

If few farmers appear to give much thought to the time and labor necessary to hand pump their water supply, even fewer give any consideration to the cost thereof. Were a farmer offered two to five cents a day for his services and those of his family, he would be justly indignant. Yet that is his own valuation if he does not install an electric water system.

An automatic electric pressure water system perhaps does more to improve the standard of living on the farm than any other single piece of equipment. It is difficult to place a value on the comfort, health, and convenience of hot and cold running water in the kitchen, laundry, toilet and bath. Nor should the protection against fire afforded by an adequate water system be overlooked, as figures prove that about 75% of all property involved in farm and rural fires is totally destroyed.

Although pressure water systems are available with other sources of power, those that are electrically operated are the most economical, reliable and trouble free. When planning and installing an electric water system and the necessary plumbing facilities, it is best first to write the extension division of your state college or university for general information on the subject. Then, after you have made a rough estimate of your requirements, call on the agricultural engineer of your power company, your engineer of your power company, your county agent, the local electrical or plumbing contractor, or the manufacturers of the pumping equipment. Any of the above agencies will be glad to assist you without cost or obligation. Follow their advice so far as you are financially able, for no farm improvement pays greater profits in health, happiness, convenience and safety than an automatic electric water system.
